ASHP Staff

Edward Stemley, M.S., Pharm.D.

Director, Section of Pharmacy Practice Managers

Edward Stemley, M.S., Pharm.D. is Director, American Society of Health-Systems Pharmacist (ASHP) Section of Pharmacy Practice Managers. He received his Pharm.D. from Xavier University, College of Pharmacy prior to earning a M.S. degree at The Ohio State University. Stemley also completed a Pharmacy Practice Residency with an emphasis in Health-System Administration from The Ohio State University Medical Center. Dr. Stemley most recently served as Chief Pharmacy Officer at the Harris County Hospital District in Houston, Texas. He was responsible for providing pharmacy service to a health-system consisting of two acute care hospitals, fourteen ambulatory clinics and a geriatric/physical rehabilitation hospital. The clinical and distributive operations provided teaching sites for the University of Houston, Texas Southern University and Xavier University of Louisiana Colleges of Pharmacy. Prior to his position at ASHP, Dr. Stemley served as a Board member for state and local chapters of ASHP in Texas, including terms as President of the State and regional chapter.

Staff development and competence has been a key component to the successful execution of optimal health-system pharmacy practice. This same commitment to the development of advanced operational procedures and technology is vital to the continued existence and enhancement of the practice itself. Dr. Stemley is responsible for and committed to providing pharmacy managers and leaders the necessary support, tools and resources to maintain and optimize their role given the constant advancement of healthcare through technological innovations and advanced scientific research. The ASHP, Section of Pharmacy Practice Managers is compassionate about its mission to be the professional community of ASHP members that fosters management skills and effective leadership.

The strides that pharmacy has made thus far have been immense. However, there is no room for complacency. The members and health-system pharmacists it represents can look forward to continued improvements and overall standards of excellence from the ASHP, Section of Pharmacy Practice Managers.
