Target Audience

This activity was planned to meet the educational needs of pharmacists involved in formulary decision making and pharmacists that are involved in team-based care of patients with migraine headaches.

Activity Overview

Direct-to-consumer advertising has increased patient awareness and is driving more patients to seek information and treatment for migraine headaches. Oral medications, such as propranolol, topiramate, and sodium valproate, are most frequently used first-line for prevention of migraine headaches, based on current guidelines, cost and ease of use. Both patients and prescribers will look to pharmacists for their knowledge and expertise to assist in assessing cost versus benefit of these new medications. The pharmacist also has a role in migraine clinics which can help patients manage their symptoms and lead a productive life when their medications are monitored and adjusted for their needs. This activity will discuss the pharmacists role in migraine treatment and medication management.

Learning Objectives

- Design List therapeutic strategies for managing migraine.
- Evaluate place in therapy/Identify the for new oral medications FDA-approved for the management of acute migraine attacks.
